I kind of think of myself as a landlocked merwitch. Incorporating elements of sea/melodic/artistic witchcraft. What's so wonderful about magick is that you can be exactly who you are and express it in your own way. As long as you're safe and respectful, what's the harm?

The Sea Priestess I find your comment highly inaccurate. I'm not understanding why you think this video is wrong? She said that not everyone identifies as these and it doesn't mean you have to stick to one, this is just a list of the most popular types of witchcraft. The examples they give obviously won't apply to everyone, but I don't think this video is wrong.

Stefani Castile Things evolve. This list is accurate. As a witch your path is your own and can go in any direction, but many people place labels on paths that are similar, so that way it's much easier to explain and connect. Yes, you can say this list is "millennial-ed" but that does not at all make it inaccurate. Everything Evolves, including religion.

Imagine if religion didn't evolve...

As long as religion isn't political or corrupt, I think its fine
Religion is like nature, constantly moving and changing and flourishing into people's personal paths.

DragonFeather369 Well I'm not personally offended or anything, but it's not really all that loose. It's actually really specific. Talking about things that don't even have anything to do with witchcraft, like what movies they like and what clothes they wear... Doesn't sound all too different from "Witches play D&D and like Harry Potter" to me...

+DragonFeather369 You did great. I feel labels are good. They help us to identify. I only elaborated on green witchcraft because I felt the defination you read was too general and tech did not define it as I explained what tech makes a green witch and Skip navigationbeing a witch tech is not it.

I enjoyed the video. Too many are trying to be politically correct and want to reject labels. They are not bad, they just need to be used correctly. Labels are how we know who we are and how we differ from what else is out there. Telling someone you are Dianic Wiccan tells us a totally different story than saying you are a Druid.

Dragonfeather, I've been watching your videos for awhile and when this video popped up I was kind of excited to see it especially since it was 20 minutes long. But I have to say that this video unfortunately (even meant in a helpful way) is actually kind of damaging to the community. Especially when you have newer people who are following you who don't know that a majority of the things listed are not actually types of witch's or witchcraft. People are allowed to follow what they want to follow but when a list like this pops up and someone with as many subscribers as you puts it out there, especially based on the type of channel you have (witchcraft and wicca), newer folks start to take it as fact, and when that happens we get a bunch of people running around saying they are an "energy witch" when in essence at the very core every witch works with energy, period. Regardless if you like to primarily use energy, it doesn't put you into a class of witchcraft labelled "energy witch". There were about 3 to 5 maybe a few more "types" on that list which are actually accurate, maybe a few more with a stretch. As you were going along I figured you would say something at the end of this video, maybe like this is related to movies or a game or something just to show it was made in a joking manner. Unfortunately you did not and this list is now out there for people to take seriously and start claiming paths that aren't there. Like I said in the beginning of this comment, I have been watching your videos for awhile, and I do like them, but this video (unless made in jest) does kind of throw a wrench in the Witchcraft community and not in a good way.

This video has seemed to come off as fact rather than me sharing a post I found on tumblr. I too found somethings a bit wonky but in the beginning I stated that this list is just for fun and is something I found on tumblr that I wanted to share with everyone to help inspire people to create their craft. This video was in no way an absolute list and I'm sorry if I didn't make that clear. To be honest I find that because so many people found this list inaccurate I really want us as a community to create a more accurate list that resonates well with everyone for I haven't really been able to find that on the internet other than this post. What do you disagree with and what would you change? Again I apologize for the confusion for I didn't mean to make this seem as absolute fact. I hope we all can work together to make a list that's accurate and represents everyone and can be used for beginners to help them follow the path that resonates with them best. Blessed be!

possibly just because they like to deal with the ocean, possibly a couple others. Things that are intrinsically apart of witchcraft are energy, shadow work, blood magick (if you feel like adding that element to your path), Oracle, Diviner, Sun, Moon, stars, spirit work (more shamanic but still apart of witchcraft). Things some witches use in their practice are crystals, storms, music, dancing (to raise energy), crafting (to make items as part of the witchcraft process). In some form or fashion you can use a bunch of different stuff in your path, Heredity Witch and Solitary Witch are two types of witches, not a form of witchcraft in itself. Exorcist witch to my knowledge doesn't exist..at least if it does it's not known, winter witch, storm witch, swamp witch, subtle witch, otherkin, vampiric, astral, theatrical, melodic, pop culture..etc. Those types aren't witchcraft paths, they could possibly exist with maybe a few people following that path, but it's entirely made up by that person or persons (as is most paths within witchcraft). Also as a final note witchcraft itself doesn't involve religion, Witchcraft itself is not a religion, and a majority of the time doesn't involve religion (unless you're Wiccan or desire to pull divinity into your own working), witchcraft itself is primarily power of self, and with assistance if you desire from surrounding nature, gods, goddesses, and so on. I'm not condemning this list at all, just a majority of it isn't correct, I look forward to other people's responses to this to figure out what they see as existing and not.

I remember when a witch was just a witch. To many teeny boppers and dabblers making things up for fun or as a serious label doesn't help. Magick is a spiritual force. And shouldn't be taken lightly nor for fun. Maybe you can do a video letting people know what it takes to be a witch. The time, education, dedication, and respect for a faith beyond the ages.

So called winding path, Dragonfeather is NOT damaging anything. She is giving basic information to other Crafts-people. If a witch is genuinely interested in learning the Craft, they will watch this video and it will create in them a want to learn more and more and more, since learning for a witch is a life-long process. Any witch will take the positive aspects of message Dragonfeather is sharing. Once a witch learns that a label on a witch comes from each and individual craft you in time will become a true witch and not only call yourself a witch. I have a spell that will ride you of your natural negative heart; but it's a very powerful spell and not sure if your heart is true. My concern is that your heart is so negative/ugly that this special spell will reverse it's purpose and create you to become a "beast-witch". The world does not need another beast-witch, so I will not share with you this powerful spell. I do hope your heart will reverse it's ugliness. Be safe, Blessed Be. J.

I want to add to what you said about a green witch. I have practiced for over 20 years and have identified as a green witch for over a decade years now. Not every green witch practices the same and not every green witch is a witch. A green witch is a witch who walks the green path. A green witch does not have to cast a circle and call the quarters. She can directly tap into the energy of stones and gemstones and herbs and other natural objects to manifest spells and working. The oath is similar to Hoodoo in that it is a mixture of two beliefs. Hoodoo mixes either African or Jamaican folk magick with European Witchcraft. Green Witchcraft mixes European Witchcraft with Native American Spirituality. Many Green Witches practice natural magick. Some practice fae magick as it is very common for the witchcraft to be Celtic. The beliefs differ depending on what you mix. I grew up with my great grandmother who is full blooded Cherokee. I believe in many Cherokee gods and goddesses and I have healing practices in common with Cherokee Shamanism. I mix my Cherokee beliefs with that of Celtic Witchcraft as I was brought up as a Celtic Witch. I worship Celtic deities (18 to be exact) but a witch who mixes Creek Shamanism and Germanic witchcraft is also a green witch as long as they walk the green path.

A person who walks the green path is someone who acts as a shaman between humanity and nature. The green witch finds a way to help her community co-exist as the natural world around her. The green witch knows the property of the natural environment around her. She studies wildcraft and geology and weather patterns for her local area. This is what defines you as a green witch. As long as you walk the green path the actual practice of witchcraft is not necessary. I personally do practice witchcraft though but the Native American beliefs are important. The name implies more emphases on witchcraft but to walk the green path you are using Shamanism native to the Americas and thus a green witch is shamanic but does not have to be a witch at all. The beliefs of the practice from witchcraft is where the name comes from not how it is practiced.

Bonseset, you have a great deal to learn. The world is a ying-yang, black and white, good and evil, man and women. These elements do not cross but use each other's energy. This dynamic is called "vortex-magik", therefore since you have a penis and testi's, you are a man and practice magik so your a "WARLOK" not a witch. The ancient meaning of "warlok" is (Keeper of the Koven, Protektor of the Kraft, Eye of the Magi. " but if you want to be a women, do so, but even if a tree calls itself a bird, the tree can not fly. Be safe, Blessed Be. J.

a witch is male or female. Do not argue with me about my religion. I added to the conversation but nothing I stated is false. Witchcraft and Green Witchcraft are seperate spiritual practices sinilar to how under the blanket of Christanity one can be Catholic or Baptist. Of course the differences in practice are more drastic. I am not a warlock and what I practice is a practice known as green witchcraft. Many identify as this and books are written on the subject and tho worded differently they do explain the same things I did.

Not all Green Witches practice witchcraft

All walk the green path which is a way of life more similar to how Buddhist live their teachings rather than just believe in them the way some followers do of other paths. It is more immersive.

The roots are Native American and European Witchcraft. Any combination of those who choose to also follow the philosophy and adopt the practices of the green path could choose to identify as a green witch.

I have met several green witches and none of us practice the same but we all follow the same principals and beliefs that is characterized as the green path.

Skip navigation
Most paths do not label their male witches as a warlock and the way I was taught as a child, a warlock practices magick that is harmful to others and are male or female. People who have negative intentions in what they do and it is nore of a derogatory term for the witches who commonly practice this way. I know other Pagans who define it similarly. People interpret things differently but do not disrespect me by trying to correct me about what I believe in when I grew up with my beliefs.

these are mostly stereotypes of witchcraft. there were so many actual denominations of the craft left almost completely unmentioned like Gardinerian and Alexandrian (oh crap! I had so many to list then my mind went blank after listing only two of the most commonly known traditions! shame on me!). the reason I say stereotypes is because in a full coven of a certain tradition there will most often be varying tastes in music, clothing, favoured magical techniques etc. no two are the same. my favourite quote which I even added to my BoS is "you are unique, just like everybody else". but I see that you've come under fire from a shit-storm of criticism and that isn't fair on you, all you did was share something created by some other witch because you found it interesting and suddenly it's raining flaming arrows! lol! for what it's worth, I found this both interesting and entertaining. Blessed Be!

Phoenix BlueFire Like I said, your belief, or lack thereof, is the only reason why you can't do it. Always remember the simple fact, magick can do anything, it's your beliefs that limit you.

Reply •

Phoenix BlueFire 2 months ago (edited)

Yes that is true magick can do anything, as long as you have energy, but humans have quite a limited amount of energy compared to other beings, such as dragons. But yes you can train yourself to hold more energy per say, and be able to move VERY light objects, but let's say something about 7 pounds in weight you wanted to move, that would take MUCH more energy humans are capable of using, BUT let's say if you were to say have a higher vibration being such as a dragon willing to lend you their energy, (very unlikely but possible) you would be able to move heavier objects such as rocks.

One of the cool things about exploring your spirituality and witchcraft is that you can draw on different aspects that speak to you and work with you. I personally find a lot of power in rosaries and prayer beads (some of which have important crystals as beads too), and still draw wisdom and important lessons about being kind, charitable, and healing from Christianity and other religions like Buddhism, Islam, Judaism, Shinto, etc. Also reading books and some websites and blogs can be useful resources to get started, there are also some very informative documentaries about different types of witchcraft and Wicca. Researching shamanism might also provide helpful information and help you find your path.

Cursed cats they definitely are very closely related! I have studied the craft from a young age and have always had dreams that often come true, like it could be the smallest thing. I never knew what this meant until a few years ago as I began to study more into the spirit workers of the craft and I realized that what my ability is as I studied this and fostered my ability it only grew. I gave my friend such an accurate tarot reading after only just having started tarot that it truly scared him. So I would say if you want to study the craft than do! As mediums and spirit workers are very much a part of the craft and those like us that have a natural affinity for spirit work can find great joy and harmony within the craft

My aunt does witchcraft im only 12 and male but i really enjoy it, i keep saying i am going to start trying to do it. But whenever i want to i dont, i find it easier to do with someone else, i preffer my aunt cuz she is skilled with it. She is a crystal witch. I really have an interest in wolves. I ask many people to call me moon because i also like the moon. I would say i am a luna witch. Me and my sister alexis would be luna. We share many things in common. I literally just saw this video and i loved it so i just subscribed. Also i would be called a warlock correct?

I feel a connection to the power of affirmations. I know that many people believe in the power of words and thoughts. I will forge a new classification for a type of witch. This is the affirmation witch.

I don't know how I would label myself. I'm a Jew, worshipping the god of the ot. I do sigils, fueled by the sun, converse with and control demons (Solomon key). I do some shamanic type stuff (not astral). draw in the darkness for spell work, and find myself seeking a fork in a stream, or a nice rock in the woods to meditate. I also work my own nature/folk magic

I think I am a solitary witch as I like to practice on my own and when I am home alone. Or in the mornings when I wake up.

I feel like people can't really say ghis list is "accurate" or "inaccurate" because everyone is different, some people will be like "omg thats exactly me!" while others will be like "i define myself as ... but I'm not like that at all" i feel like its kind of like a horoscope when you bring in personality.

Very interesting but seems a bit stereotypical at times. I am too a Tumblr user and while each one did hold some truth there was also just as much as misinformation on each type of witch. I understand that this list was created by the user for fun but I feel like this list was done immature. Most of these are just specialization of a more broader type of craft.

I found this informative... To a certain point.

Once it began stereotyping things such as "Sun Witches enjoy throwing barbecues", it threw me a bit off.

Besides the stereotypes/"personality traits", this was fascinating and a nice rough guide.
